I'm Jona, a maker, and at heart a learner.

Everything I know, I've learned by making, across the whole of the web: front end, back end, infrastructure, architecture. From that lived experience comes what I trust most: a gut sense for what matters.

So I work with what matters first, and let the details fall into place. I make things true to what they are, honest and simple. For me, how we work and what we build are one question.

What I care about building is what has potential in it: an idea with something strong in it, something that compounds. That's where I match. I orchestrate the understanding and the making around it. With the people, it's teaching, learning and building together. That's how the whole of the product comes into being.

I'm open to wherever that leads next. What does growth mean to you?
